Surrey election

No fatigue in long, even race

It's been a long and grueling mayoral race in Surrey but none of the three frontrunners are taking their foot off the gas now.

Less than three points separate Linda Hepner, Doug McCallum and Barinder Rasode heading into Saturday's election, according to an Insights West poll released this week.

That means the push is on as candidates enter the final stretch of a heated months-long campaign.

"I've been privileged to serve on council for three terms and this is the most active it's ever been," said Hepner, outgoing Mayor Dianne Watts' heir at Surrey First. "It's been a fast-paced campaign … for a long time now."

McCallum, former three-term mayor at the city, and Rasode, a councillor who broke away from Surrey First, also say this campaign has been the most intense they've been involved in.

"It's been really encouraging," said Rasode. "It's a good thing. It's a big responsibility to be the mayor and I think the poll does speak to the fact each candidate has a different demographic supporting them."

Even on Thursday, the message from all three camps seemed to target a different audience.

"People I've talked to say they're tried of having their city get trashed," said Hepner. "With all the talk about public safety and fear, they're not talking about transportation and jobs."

Hepner says the city's growth can't continue without a long-desired light rapid transit system, and she's prepared to use developer fees to finance the project and get it running by 2018 if public dollars don't come through.

McCallum said his political comeback is primarily due to a rise in violent crime and financial mismanagement since he was last in office in 2005.

"I've never seen it so bad, that's not just me saying that," he said.

McCallum wants to hire 142 new RCMP officers and double the number of bylaw officers at the city.

To the victor will go the spoils — and the keys to the city — but all three have revelled in taking part in a potentially historic race.

Maybe then they can finally take a breather.

Saturday election. LaPointe in dead heat with incumbent in polls, Wong far third

EMILY JACKSON
emily.jackson@metronews.ca

In the final stretch of the election campaign, Vancouver Mayor Gregor Robertson is pleading with all "progressive" voters to give him another chance as his main challenger, the Non-Partisan Association's Kirk LaPointe, takes every opportunity to lambast the mayor for his failures over the past six years.

There's a dead heat between the two as voters head to the polls on Saturday, with the Coalition of Progressive Electors' Meena Wong still fighting hard despite polls that place her in a distant third.

Robertson appealed to voters wandering the streets on Thursday, saying his extraordinary apology on Wednesday outlines his commitment to listening and doing better if he is elected for a third term.

"I have learned a lot in my six years as mayor, I really care about this city, and I want to do better for our city," he said.

He encouraged Green Party and COPE voters to select Vision candidates, appealing to their shared values surrounding affordable housing, homelessness and greenest city goals.

"We have to have a progressive team to prevent the NPA from rolling back these key programs," he said.

But LaPointe argued voters should have no patience to put up with Vision for another four years, saying the "vague" apology asked for "blanket forgiveness."

"I want to open the doors to City Hall and rebuild the trust in government lost during the Vision Vancouver era," LaPointe said at a news conference, adding the vote is a "referendum" on Vision's failure to deliver on their promise to end homelessness and their "cozy relationships."

Taking a page out of beloved Calgary Mayor Naheed Nenshi's playbook, LaPointe promised not to meet with developers behind closed doors if elected.

While polls say Robertson is seen as best suited to deal with affordable housing problems — the top issue in Metro Vancouver — LaPointe argues his biggest asset is the ability to create a new culture that listens to neighbourhoods.

Meantime, Wong doesn't believe the polls (remember the 2013 provincial election?) and is still hopeful she has a chance.

"We call on progressive voters to come home, to come back to COPE, because we are the only party that will stand up to developers," she said.

"We are the only alternative."

Advanced polls. Vancouverites cast their ballots early in record numbers

Advance voting in Vancouver's 2014 municipal election nearly doubled from the 2011 election, the chief election officer announced Thursday.

A record 38,556 ballots were cast early this year compared to 19,484 in the 2011 election.

Chief Elections Officer Janice MacKenzie is hopeful of a surge in voting on Saturday.

"One of my top priorities is encouraging people to get out to vote," she said at a news conference. "Thus far, the turnout has been excellent."

The city increased the number of advance voting days and locations this year, but received criticism for neglecting to locate advance polls in the Downtown Eastside or Grandview Woodland.

Polls open on Saturday from 8 a.m. to 8 a.m. For more information, visit vancouver.ca/vote.

1,069 Musqueam land residents accidentally left off list of voters

Officials scrambling. Candidates did not receive their names to conduct voter outreach

emily.jackson@metronews.ca

More than a thousand registered voters living on Musqueam land were accidentally left off Vancouver's voters list, an oversight that left city officials scrambling to distribute election information with just two days before general voting on Saturday.

The 1,069 people left off the list — a mix of band members and leaseholders on the First Nation's land — did not receive their voter registration cards or election pamphlets, and candidates did not receive their names to conduct voter outreach, chief election officer Janice MacKenzie said at a news conference on Thursday.

Vancouver's Chief Election Officer Janice MacKenzie advises reporters of a mistake with the voters list on Thursday.
JENNIFER GAUTHIER/METRO

After MacKenzie learned of the error on Wednesday afternoon, she called Musqueam Chief Wayne Sparrow to alert him of the problem, updated the registered voters list to be used at polling stations, distributed the new list to candidates and sent city officials door-to-door to distribute information on Thursday.

"I am confident the steps I have taken will address the issue in an expedited way and make sure that all eligible voters can participate in the election on Saturday," she said. "No one has lost their right to vote."

At least 35 people who were left off the list have already voted by re-registering.

It's not exactly clear how the mistake was made, but it occurred when Vancouver requested the voters list from Elections B.C. (About 50 per cent of B.C. municipalities get their voters lists from the province.)

Elections B.C. spokesman Don Main said the city must ask for names from specific voting areas (each contain about 400 people), but neglected to include three voting areas from Musqueam land.

Late Wednesday

City learned of error from unlisted voter

The city learned of the error late Wednesday afternoon, from a voter who complained when he noticed he wasn't on the registered voters list as he should have been.

An election can be contested as invalid if it was not conducted in accordance with the Vancouver Charter.

Under section 35 of the Charter, a list of registered electors must be available for public inspection from the 46th day before general voting day. METRO

Family hosts cancer fundraiser to carry on son's spirit of giving

'Keian absolutely loved Christmas.'
Boy passed away last January at age 6

THANDI FLETCHER
thandi.fletcher@metronews.ca

No matter how sick he was, Keian Blundell always wanted to give back to others.

Christmas was no exception for the six-year-old from Langley, B.C., who spent last December delivering more than 300 presents to other sick children at B.C. Children's Hospital and Canuck Place Children's Hospice.

"Keian absolutely loved Christmas," dad Ryan Blundell told Metro. "It was the biggest time of year for him."

Only two weeks later, Keian passed away, just 18 months after he was diagnosed with a rare and aggressive cancer called T-cell acute lymphoblastic leukemia.

Since his son's passing, Ryan said it's been a difficult year of "first withouts" for him and wife Chantal, from Keian's birthday to now experiencing their first Christmas without him.

Despite their grief, Ryan said it was important for them to carry on their son's spirit of giving, especially during the holiday season.

On Saturday, Ryan and Chantal are holding a bottle drive and fundraiser in Langley in memory of Keian to raise funds for families affected by childhood cancers. The family is also running a toy drive until Dec. 15.

For Ryan, helping parents who are going through the same financial struggles his family faced is a cause close to his heart.

Last year, after taking time off work to care for Keian, the family had to give up their home and eventually moved into a trailer in the hospital parkade.

It wasn't until an online fundraiser saw nearly $45,000 raised for the family that Ryan said they were able to spend every waking moment at Keian's side without having to worry about finances.

That generosity inspired the family to pay it forward to others this Christmas, at the same time honouring Keian's legacy of giving.

"Kids say they want to be like their mom or their dad when they grow up, but I want to be like Keian when I grow up," he said.

Saturday's bottle drive and fundraiser is taking place from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the north parking lot of the Langley Events Centre. Bottles, gift cards, cash and toy donations are welcomed.

Carousel moves in for annual Christmas Market

Over 50 vendors. 'It's the only carousel in the Vancouver area so it's very special'

thandi.fletcher@metronews.ca

The Vancouver Christmas Market's carousel was lifted into place Thursday at the Queen Elizabeth Theatre Plaza.

For Malte Kluetz, president of the Vancouver Christmas Market, the annual tradition of seeing the carousel soar above dozens of wooden huts lining the plaza marks the start of the holiday season.

"It's always a highlight and shows that we are very close to the market opening," Kluetz told Metro. "It's the only carousel in the Vancouver area so it's very special and our visitors like it a lot."

Taking place Nov. 22 to Dec. 24, the fifth annual Christmas Market offers visitors the sights, tastes and sounds of a 700-year-old German tradition known as Christkindlmarkt.

This year's market features over 50 vendors with 17 different food options, including Dutch mini pancakes, Ukrainian crepes and vegan options.

Visitors can also enjoy authentic Glühwein, a traditional German mulled wine, listen to Christmas carols and take in the sight of thousands of twinkling lights throughout the plaza.

Kluetz said last year's market saw 173,000 visitors. He expects to see more than 180,000 visitors this year.

The market is open 11 a.m. to 9 p.m. daily, and 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Dec. 24.

Oh buoy! Vancouver man on the hook for over $130K in yacht repairs, judge says

There's a saying among boat owners: A boat is a hole in the water into which you pour money. Garfield Johnson of Vancouver learned this after he undertook a repair of his late father's old yacht, the Dorie Gal.

The vessel had been kept in Haida Gwaii but the son wanted his father, Chester, to see the yacht one more time before passing away, so he brought the vessel to Deep Cove in North Vancouver.

After his father died in 2010, Johnson, the sole beneficiary of his father's trust, which owned the boat, wanted to make it seaworthy in order to sell it. He was told if the vessel was refurbished, it would be worth about $150,000.

Through an intermediary, Johnson was put in touch with Raven Marine in North Vancouver, which inspected the Dorie Gal. According to Johnson, Raven's quote for the repairs was $80,000.

However, according to Raven's principal, John Nassichuk, this estimate was not intended to be a fixed-price quote, but rather a ballpark figure on engine replacement alone.

Work began in 2011. As work on the Dorie Gal started to take longer, bills began adding up, and Johnson stopped paying. By 2012, Nassichuk had the Dorie Gal seized, leading Johnson to sue North Shore Yacht Works, which did business as Raven Marine, and North Shore Yacht Works counterclaimed.

By November 2014, the ruling was in. The judge awarded North Shore Yacht Works a total amount of $131,719, and also awarded damages to the Johnson trust — $5,000 for the wrongful seizure and $8,500 for the damage caused to the vessel while seized.

Vancouver schools fostering new generation of virtual athletes

eSports League. School board embraces the virtual side of teamwork

Eight teams representing various Vancouver high schools are currently competing toe-to-toe for bragging rights and supremacy.

But instead of this competition taking place on a basketball court, soccer field or running track, a new generation of secondary school athletes are sitting behind keyboards, mice and computer screens.

Welcome to the inaugural Vancouver School Board-endorsed eSports league, one that culminates Friday with a winner-takes-all tournament featuring students playing the massively popular online video game League of Legends.

"I'm not a gamer, so it sounded crazy to me but the more I read about it, the more I realized there are strong parallels between athletic sports and eSports," said John Oliver Secondary School's Jeff Spence, the teacher sponsoring Friday's tournament.

"Camaraderie, teamwork, a social network. I played hockey and soccer and we're providing the same things here in a safe environment."

League of Legends, a five-on-five competitive computer game that stresses teamwork, strategy and communication, is the most popular game on the scene and the one Friday's tournament is built around.

Not only is each participating school sending a team of players to John Oliver for the after-school tournament, but plenty of spectators are expected to accompany them as well.

Spence admits he wasn't sold on the idea of a school-board-wide video game league at first, but said teenagers are playing the games anyway and should have a positive place to do it.

"What we're letting them do is share their passion," said Spence, a programming teacher.

The tournament will also promote VSB's technology courses to interested students, letting them try their hand at introductory programming, app design and 3D printing between the action.

The championship rings will be 3D printed on site.

What the heck are eSports?

For the uninitiated, eSports are organized video game competitions and they have become a major draw in many parts of the world.

Players can make hundreds of thousands of dollars at tournaments and in sponsorships while thousands of fans pack sports stadiums (and millions more stream online) to watch professional teams compete at world championships.

The U.S. even now issues visas for professional eSports players.

Human remains case turns into murder probe

Sara Norouzy. DNA test leads police to ID remains found in 2012 in North Van

Human remains found in North Vancouver more than two years ago have been identified as a 31-year-old woman from Iran — now police are looking for new leads in her murder.

The Integrated Homicide Investigation Team announced Thursday that the remains discovered in August 2012 near a gravel path were those of Fatemah Norouzy-Pooresfahany, who may have used the name Sara Norouzy in Canada.

Sgt. Jennifer Pound said police believe the victim was alive at the end of July that year.

"We no longer need to concentrate our efforts on identifying Sara," Pound said in a news release.

"IHIT will now move forward with any and all evidence gathering in order to find out who is responsible for her murder and bring them to justice."

Pound said Norouzy-Pooresfahany lived with her mother in North Vancouver for several years before returning to Iran.

Norouzy-Pooresfahany returned to Canada alone in 2011 and had little contact with her mother, Pound said.

She had no fixed address, occasionally stayed at homeless shelters and is believed to have frequented Burnaby and North Vancouver. Pound said the victim's mother returned to Canada this past September and began searching for her daughter, contacting the RCMP in North Vancouver.

Norouzy-Pooresfahany's identity was confirmed after a DNA analysis, Pound said.

She said investigators are looking for anyone with information on Norouzy-Pooresfahany and her associates and friends. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Lynn Canyon Park

RCMP looking for man seen lying near waterfall

Mounties are hoping the public can help them identify a barefoot man who was acting strangely in Lynn Canyon Park last Saturday.

Around 3 p.m., North Vancouver RCMP responded to a report of a man climbing next to a waterfall.

Witnesses told police the man was lying down on a small ledge beside a 27-metre waterfall.

When officers arrived, the man had vanished, raising concerns that he had fallen into the creek.

Police, North Shore Search and Rescue and the Coast Guard searched the area but did not find him.

"The RCMP only seeks to check the male's well-being and is not investigating him for any criminal offence," said Cpl. Sue Tupper.

The man is described as white and was wearing pajama-like pants.

Child porn victim 'was never the same again'

Ruling. Parents of victim satisfied with conditional discharge in high-profile case

HALEY RYAN
Metro in Halifax

A sheriff's deputy stands outside youth court in Halifax on Thursday. A young man who pleaded guilty in a prominent child pornography case has been given a conditional discharge. ANDREW VAUGHAN/THE CANADIAN PRESS

The father of a victim in a high-profile child pornography case said he feels good about the strong comments made by the judge during sentencing, but would have liked to hear an apology from the accused "when it mattered."

On Thursday, a youth court judge gave a conditional discharge to a 20-year-old man who pleaded guilty to making child porn involving a 15-year-old girl.

He cannot be identified because he was 17 when he committed the offence.

The girl died last year after she was taken off life support following a suicide attempt, and cannot be identified because of a publication ban. She was 17.

"There's no sentence that would be good enough or strong enough to ever reflect what this did to my daughter," the father told reporters after court. His name can't be published because it would identify the victim.

The victim's father said he was glad the judge spoke strongly to the accused about the impact the photo had on his daughter's life, but would have liked to hear from the young man before the incident came to court.

"He knew the damage that this did, and didn't do anything about it. He should have did it when it mattered," he said.

Nearly a dozen Anonymous protesters holding signs with the victim's name shouted "f–k the ban" outside court.

Both parents read victim impact statements in court and wiped tears from their eyes, with her mother saying the photo "ruined her life."

"She was never the same again," her mother said. "The impact and trauma that followed her was enormous."

Her mother said she is still trying to forgive the man for taking the photo, but does not believe he deserved jail time.

Guilty plea

Man avoids jail time

A young man who pleaded guilty to making child pornography after he took a picture of an intoxicated teenager having sex at a party was given a conditional discharge and a sharp reprimand by the judge for destroying the girl's life.

The 20-year-old stood stone-faced Thursday as the youth court judge spent 40 minutes reading the sentence in a case that captured national attention.

"He should never forget the promising, vibrant, young life that was eventually destroyed by his choice to record an act of sexual degradation," Judge Gregory Lenehan told the packed courtroom in Halifax.

"You did in a few seconds set in motion a series of events that led to a great deal of shame, humiliation, anger, despair, anguish, loss, hurt and destruction."

The young man will also have to register with the national DNA database and meet with a youth worker for 12 months. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Winnipeg. Teen beaten and left for dead a 'fighter,' says mother

When Julie Harper heard a knock at the door Saturday morning, she thought it was her 16-year-old daughter Rinelle, who had been out celebrating the completion of her high school midterms.

Instead, it was a Winnipeg police detective, there to tell her Rinelle had been beaten, sexually assaulted and left for dead beside the Assiniboine River. When she rushed to the hospital, Harper didn't recognize her badly-beaten daughter.

"I can still see her, lying there," Harper said Thursday. "I didn't think that was Rinelle, but it was her."

Sexual assault victims aren't usually identified publicly, but Rinelle's parents allowed police to release her name while they searched for her attackers. Tips poured in and two young men, aged 20 and 17, were arrested Tuesday. They face charges of attempted murder and sexual assault. The two are also accused of aggravated sexual assault on a 23-year-old woman later that same night.

Julie Harper said her daughter had just moved out of intensive care and into the children's ward Thursday. "She's a big role model," she said. "She's a fighter. She's a hero to everybody." THE CANADIAN PRESS

The attack

- Police say Rinelle was out with friends Friday night when she got separated from her group. She met two men who struck up a conversation with her and the three of them walked to the Assiniboine River. There, police say, she was attacked and ended up in the frigid water.
- Rinelle managed to crawl out of the river upstream, but was attacked a second time and left, unconscious, to die.

Remembrance Day

Police launch investigation into 'phoney' soldier

Police are looking into claims that a man impersonated a Canadian soldier when he showed up in full — but flawed — military regalia at this week's Remembrance Day ceremonies in Ottawa.

Eagle-eyed veterans and soldiers knew right away that something was amiss as the man was being interviewed during CBC's live coverage of Tuesday's events near the National War Memorial.

Various media reports have cited complaints about the style of the man's beard, the type of beret on his head, the positioning of his medals and badges, and the fact that he wasn't wearing a sash during the interview. It is a crime under the Criminal Code to impersonate a soldier.

After initially saying they had not received a formal complaint, Ottawa police issued a tweet Thursday to say that they would be launching an investigation following "numerous inquiries" about the man. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Kink versus coercion: How experts test sexual desire

S&M and consent. Canada's top forensic psychiatrist explains what tests can tell us

JESSICA SMITH CROSS
Metro in Toronto

Some people are aroused by consensual sadomasochistic sex, and others are turned on by violating another person's consent.

In sexual-behaviour laboratories in Ottawa, it's possible to tell the difference.

The high-profile allegations against former CBC host Jian Ghomeshi have raised a lot of questions about consent and S&M.

"There are some people who, besides the fact that they may be interested in S&M sex, may also have arousal or sexual interest or sexual preference related to non-consensual sex," said Dr. John Bradford. "When we evaluate people ... we can tease out these types of things, to see what the sexual preference actually is."

Bradford has examined the country's most infamous sexually motivated serial killers: Paul Bernardo, Robert Pickton and Russell Williams. Bradford is the founder of the Forensic Psychiatry Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons of Canada in Ottawa, professor of forensic psychiatry at multiple universities, and a member of the Order of Canada.

He said that when discussing Ghomeshi, who has publicly acknowledged engaging in "rough sex," it's important to recognize that sadomasochism occurs all over the world between consenting people without issue.

He has not examined Ghomeshi and said he could talk only in general terms.

Nine women and one man have accused Ghomeshi of crimes including sexual harassment and non-consensual sexual violence. Ghomeshi has said through a Facebook posting that all of his sexual activities were consensual. He is under police investigation, but has not been charged.

Studying sexual preference

Bradford said a preference for non-consensual sex can be determined.

"We have sexual-behaviour laboratories where we can measure sexual arousal," he said.

Bradford said the subject would be presented with different situations — consensual and non-consensual — and his arousal would be measured to determine a sexual interest in violating consent. The subject would also be presented erotic aggression to determine sadistic interest.

Bradford said a preference for non-consensual sex can be determined by measuring physical signs of arousal, such as penis circumference.

If coercion, non-consensual sexual activity or violence is arousing to a person, it may be compulsive, he said.

"At a very high level, you see that in serial rapists and even people who go on to commit sexually motivated homicide. Like all biological things, there is a spectrum there."

Toronto police have opened an investigation into former CBC radio host Jian Ghomeshi. Three women have come forward with accusations of sexual misconduct against him. No charges have been filed. CBC/THE CANADIAN PRESS

Bradford typically offers his expertise at the sentencing stage of a criminal trial after examining the perpetrator.

"I suppose in theory, in extremely rare circumstances, it could be used as a guilt-or-innocence thing, but I don't think it should be. It's mostly related to treatability or rehabilitation and those components which come out at sentencing."

Nature or nurture? Choice or compulsion?

Even though Bradford is able to determine what people are aroused by, what's made them that way remains largely a mystery.

"What we know is that people who have atypical sexual interests, the best way to understand it is the same as anyone else. When we hit puberty and become sexually (mature) — we wake up, if you like — there's an outpouring of sex hormones, we develop a sex drive and sexual fantasies and urges.

"This appears to be pre-programmed. In other words, nobody chooses at that point to become pedophilic or have an atypical interest in S&M or things like that," he said.

There is research into whether developing an atypical sexual interest is nature or nurture, but it's inconclusive, he said. Most of the nature vs. nurture research is focused on criminals who commit sexually motivated homicides.

Some of those who commit sexually motivated homicides have been found to have brain damage or a chromosome abnormality.

However, that research can't explain why some people with atypical sexual preferences participate only in consenting activities, while others don't.

Bradford said there is promising research into how sexuality may be formed by the interaction of genetics and hormones while a person is still in the womb. That research is still too preliminary to be relied upon.

What's the deal with Big Ears Teddy?

As for one of the odder details of the Ghomeshi allegations — that he turned around his "Big Ears Teddy" so it couldn't see him become violent — Bradford said he couldn't know what it means without examining Ghomeshi.

But, if he were involved in a case with that detail, it would certainly be something he'd ask about.

"It may have all kinds of implications to it. It may be something to do with childhood.... It could be, in theory, very important if someone was engaged in a criminal trial and sentencing process. It may make the problems more understandable, and may also go to treatability," he said.

Professor remains defiant despite losing terrorism extradition fight

An Ottawa sociology professor says he will keep fighting for his freedom now that he faces certain extradition to France in a decades-old terrorism case.

The Supreme Court of Canada said Thursday it would not hear the appeal of Hassan Diab, wanted for questioning by French authorities in connection with the October 1980 bombing of a Paris synagogue.

Some time in the next six weeks, Diab — now locked in an Ottawa jail — will be whisked to France, where a judge will quiz him about the unsolved crime.

French authorities suspect Diab, 60, was involved in the anti-Semitic bombing 34 years ago that killed four people and injured dozens.

In a statement, Diab described life since his arrest six years ago as a Kafkaesque nightmare. He expressed shock and disappointment in the high-court decision and promised to never stop battling "the false allegations" levelled against him.

"I had hoped for justice from the Canadian legal system," he said. "I vow to never give up, and I will always remain hopeful that I will eventually return to my home in Canada and be reunited with my wife and children."

In keeping with standard practice, the Supreme Court gave no reason for its decision.

In submissions to the court, Diab's lawyer Donald Bayne argued that France's reliance on secret information raises basic issues of constitutionality and procedural fairness. Another key element of the case is the reliability of evidence that has been revealed to date — particularly handwriting on a hotel registration card allegedly penned by Diab.

Check ID if girl looks underage, johns told

Sex workers. But new prostitution laws could be 'disincentive' for johns to call police, professor points out

JOE LOFARO
Metro in Ottawa

A lead detective in Ottawa's teen pimp investigation wants men who purchase sex to ensure the people they are having sex with are over 18 and willing participants. But an advocate for sex workers warns doing so might put johns in a legal quandary.

After the ringleader of the teen pimping ring was sentenced last week as an adult, Ottawa police Det. Carolyn Botting said men need to start talking to other men about the purchase of sex. "I think you have to do more than ask a person their age. You need to check identification," said Botting in an interview with Metro on Wednesday.

Det. Carolyn Botting, left, and Det. Kelly Lyle said the victims are happy with the 6-1/2-year sentence given to an 18-year-old woman who lured girls into a prostitution ring in Ottawa in 2012. JOE LOFARO/METRO IN OTTAWA

Chris Bruckert, a criminology professor at the University of Ottawa, said it is realistic to ask johns to make a better effort to ensure their customers are over 18 and consenting.

However, with the federal government's new prostitution laws that come into effect Dec. 6, Bruckert suspects the legislation will put johns in an awkward situation.

"If in fact they do call police because they suspect someone is underage or in a situation of exploitation, they're actually setting themselves up to be criminally charged," said Bruckert, a member of Prostitutes of Ottawa/Gatineau Work, Educate and Resist (POWER). "So, that's quite a big disincentive to not help the police."

Ottawa police uncovered the underage pimping ring in part because a john did call police after a girl who came to his door on May 18, 2012, told him she was 17 and was forced to be there. He later testified in court as a witness for the Crown.

Ottawa police identified four out of at least six johns in the teen pimping case. Only one was charged.

P.E.I. Needles now found in 10 potatoes, RCMP say

The RCMP in Prince Edward Island say their investigation into food tampering now includes 10 potatoes containing sewing needles.

The Mounties say the needles were found in three more potatoes originating from Linkletter Farms in Summerside with the help of metal detection equipment.

The potatoes were returned as part of a voluntary recall and have been sent to a forensic laboratory for more testing.

Police were already investigating seven incidents of potato tampering throughout the Atlantic provinces.

The RCMP say three more pallets of recalled potatoes have yet to be examined.

The potato industry in P.E.I. is offering a reward of up to $50,000 for information as to how needles ended up in the potatoes. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Bigger than Tigger: Real tiger on loose near Disneyland Paris

On the prowl. With 70-kilogram cat nearby, police urge residents of three neighbouring French towns to stay indoors

Members of the police animal brigade walk through the streets of Montevrain, east of Paris on Thursday. French authorities said a young tiger, seen inset, was on the loose near Disneyland Paris and urged residents in three towns to stay indoors. THIBAULT CAMUS/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

French authorities said a young tiger was on the loose Thursday near Disneyland Paris, one of Europe's top tourist destinations, and urged residents in three towns to stay indoors.

The town of Montevrain sent out a news alert on its Facebook page Thursday saying a young tiger was spotted in the brush behind some tennis courts and a soccer field. The field is about nine kilometres from Disneyland Paris.

Around 60 police, fire and other security forces were trying to track the tiger, said Cedric Tartaud, chief of staff for the Montevrain mayor.

The tiger is estimated to weigh around 70 kilograms, Tartaud said.

Police were using a helicopter to help search for the animal, and a wolf-catcher was also drafted in to aid in the search, Seine-et-Marne authorities said.

Police and rescue squads at the scene roped off a security perimeter, authorities added, and they urged people living in Montevrain, Chessy and Chalifert to remain indoors. If they had to travel, police advised them to stay in their cars.

The Parc des Félins, a wild cat animal park about 18 miles from Montevrain, said in a statement on its website that all of its animals were accounted for and the escaped tiger didn't come from there.

EuroDisney, the operator of Disneyland Paris, said it has no tigers in the theme park, so the errant cat could not have come from there either. It wasn't immediately clear if any extra precautions had been taken inside the park. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Overshadowed. Philae cut off from solar energy

This image released by the ESA Thursday reveals details about the composition of the comet's surface. ESA,ROSETTA,PHILAE/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Europe's comet lander Philae has come to rest in the shadow of a cliff, posing a potential problem for its solar panels, scientists said Thursday as they published the first image ever taken from a comet's surface.

The photo shows a rocky terrain, with one of the lander's three feet in the corner of the frame. It is part of a slew of data that Philae is transmitting back to Earth, indicating that its instruments are working properly, said Jean-Pierre Bibring, the lander's lead scientist at the European Space Agency (ESA).

Before deciding whether to try to adjust the lander, scientists will spend the next day or two collecting as much data as possible while its primary battery still has energy. The lander's solar panels were designed to provide an extra hour of battery life each day after that, but this may not be possible now.

"We (can) see that we got less solar power than we planned for," said Koen Geurts of the lander team.

"This, of course, has an impact on our energy budget and our capabilities to conduct science for an extended period of time," he said. "Unfortunately, this is not a situation that we were hoping for."

The landing was beset by a series of problems that began when the thrusters designed to push Philae on to the comet failed, and continued when two harpoons meant to be used as anchors did not deploy. The lander bounced back up and came to rest on the comet two hours later inside a shallow crater, in the shadow of a nearby cliff, Bibring said.

He said the data they'll be able to collect with the primary batteries alone will have made the landing worthwhile.

"A lot of science is getting covered now," he said, noting they would soon receive data about the comet's composition and 3D images of the comet.

He said they will wait for the first batch of data to be completely sent before trying to move it and adjust its solar panels. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Dickson County Sheriff's Office in Middle Tennessee ended up paying a ransom after a malicious computer program blocked access to their files.

Det. Jeff McCliss told WTVF-TV that malware on a computer locked the agency's case files, which included autopsy reports, witness statements and crime scene photos. He says the malware, called "Cryptowall," doesn't tamper with files on a computer, but keeps them locked until a ransom is paid.

A new study says lightning strikes in the United States will likely increase by nearly 50 per cent by the end of the century, as the world gets warmer and wetter. # Al-Qaida and ISIL may work together

Terrorist pact. Officials believe militant groups have reached a deal to unite in fight against U.S.-led coalition forces

Militant leaders from al-Qaida and ISIL (Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant) gathered at a farmhouse in Syria last week and agreed on a plan to stop fighting each other and work together against their opponents, according to a high-level Syrian opposition official and a rebel commander.

Such an accord could present difficulties for Washington's strategy against ISIL. While warplanes from a U.S.-led coalition strike militants from the air, the U.S. has counted on arming "moderate" rebel factions to push them back on the ground.

Those rebels, already considered relatively weak and disorganized, would face far stronger opposition if the two heavy-hitting militant groups are now working together.

ISIL and al-Qaida's affiliate in Syria, known as the Nusra Front, have fought each other for a year to dominate the rebellion against Syrian President Bashar Assad.

Co-operation would likely fall short of unifying the rival militant groups, and experts believe any pact could easily unravel. U.S. intelligence officials say a full merger is not expected soon — if ever.

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

ISIL vs. al-Qaida

- Warring factions. ISIL entered the Syria war in 2012 from its home in Iraq and tried to impose itself as the leading faction in the rebellion behind which it feels all pious Muslims should unite. Al-Qaida initially rejected ISIL's claims to any role in Syria, and Nusra and other factions entered a war-within-a-war. But ISIL swelled in power, weapons and cash after overrunning much of northern and western Iraq.

Hachette and Amazon bury the hatchet

A real nail-biter. After some twists and turns the online retailer and book publisher have reached a happy ending

One of publishing's nastiest, most high-profile conflicts, the months-long standoff between Amazon.com and Hachette Book Group, is ending.

Amazon and Hachette announced a multi-year agreement Thursday. With ebook revenues reportedly the key issue, Amazon had removed pre-order tags for Hachette books, reduced discounts and slowed deliveries, hurdles that should be gone well before the crucial holiday shopping season.

"This is great news for writers," Hachette CEO Michael Pietsch said in a statement. "The new agreement will benefit Hachette authors for years to come."

David Naggar, an Amazon vice-president, said the company was pleased that the agreement "includes specific financial incentives for Hachette to deliver lower prices, which we believe will be a great win for readers and authors alike."

The Amazon-Hachette dispute had dominated publishing headlines and conversations for much of the year. James Patterson, John Green and hundreds of authors from various publishers had condemned Amazon, and Hachette author Stephen Colbert mocked the online retailer, which prides itself on customer service.

'TIS EASIER TO SEND THAN TO RECEIVE

GUEST COLUMN

Kate Carraway
metronews.ca

Of the many new and exciting ways to be sort of awful to each other that the online age has created, sending links is among the worst.

It doesn't seem like it would be, I know. And maybe it's not, actually. Many a link — via email, text message, chat, and messages, direct or instant, to articles, memes, videos, and other Internet detritus — is sent with the best possible intentions. This includes stories that you're sure a friend would dig and probably hasn't seen, or a link to a zoo's "panda cam" sent on somebody's sick day, or A-grade gossip that is best circulated as-is for maximum schadenfreude impact.

But maybe more often, it's a ubiquitous bad habit enabled by social media; either a low-effort attempt to communicate something you don't or can't say yourself, or the casually passive-aggressive equivalency of an anonymous note — like, say, when I was exhausted by constant, pointless arguing with my then-boyfriend. I'd send him links to articles that more or less reflected my own position on a topic, and then would refuse to discuss or debate the links with him. (I now call that a "hit-and-run.")

One of my best friends hates watching videos online — something to do with having to locate and put on her headphones in her open-plan office — and just deletes them.

I don't like receiving a link of any kind without a note of context to let me know if I'm interrupting my daily sprint toward a deadline with a two-minute music video or a seven-page long-read about poverty.

Our individual Internet-styles are so totally personal and obscured from our friends and colleagues, and contingent on everything from loading speeds to work schedules and responsibilities, to emotional capacities for different kinds of content, that an act requiring the barest physical and mental effort to send can require much more to receive.

The "?" I might type in response to the sudden, stressful appearance of a link in a Gchat conversation — what will this be; what will the IRL implications be on my time and feelings and inbox; will I seriously have to click this and then respond to it — means my sweet friend sending a dancing pizza gif is cornered into explaining what was intended as a tiny, funny gesture.

Sending a link to someone is different in purpose and effect than posting it for any and everyone to see.

Even with the very kindest online instincts — a dancing slice of pizza! — comes an expectation that the sended-to person engages with some third-party stuff.

My own rule is to send something that I think someone might like, but never follow up or ask if they've read it.

It's not what your friend has to say, but what your friend wants you to see — that is a special kind of imposition on our attention, and a new, complicated social obligation to add to the list.

The politics of appropriation

A Burman woman in Kayan-Padaung attire with a fake copper neck ring stands with other women in ethnic attire to welcome leaders attending the East Asia Summit at Myanmar International Convention Centre in Naypyitaw. GEMUNU AMARASINGHE/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Myanmar's 'diverse' greeters all come from dominant ethnic group

Women welcoming world leaders at the East Asia summit on Thursday stood in rows, clad in costumes representing Myanmar's many ethnic groups, some with their hair tied in high knots or wrapped in red headdresses, others donning horizontally striped longyis and silver coin-studded capes.

But the ushers did not belong to any of the minority groups they represented. All were Burman, the ethnic majority that has dominated the government, military and economy since independence from Britain in 1948. Myanmar, a mostly Buddhist nation of 50 million, began transitioning to democracy in 2011 following a half-century of brutal military rule and self-imposed isolation.

But while 40 per cent of the population belongs to one of more than 130 ethnic minorities, efforts by the new government to project unity often falter.

Take Naypyitaw. Purpose-built as Myanmar's new capital, it is dotted by impressive stadiums, enormous meeting halls and hundreds of villas. Gilded pagodas abound, but there is not a single church, even though 80,000 residents are Christian.

Delayed sequels are often dumb

Movies. Twenty-year delay between Dumb and Dumber films invites comparison to such bombs as Bambi II, The Birds II and The Odd Couple II

It's been 20 years since the original movie, but Harry and Lloyd haven't gotten any smarter, or funnier. CONTRIBUTED

Twenty years ago, Roger Ebert wrote that a moment in Dumb and Dumber, "made me laugh so loudly, I embarrassed myself."

The movie, starring Jim Carrey and Jeff Daniels as the chicken-brained Lloyd and Harry, made $250 million and seemed likely to spawn a sequel, but nothing happened for almost 20 years.

There was a prequel — Dumb and Dumberer: When Harry Met Lloyd — but it was a Carrey-and-Daniel-less exercise in futility I called on its 2003 release, "one of the least-funny and ineptly made movies to ever play at your local multiplex."

So why did it take 19 years and 333 days to release a Dumb and Dumber follow-up? Carrey says he wasn't into doing sequels but softened because everyone kept hounding him, he joked, "even dead people."

Fans had to wait ages for Dumb and Dumber's return, but two decades is a mere drop in the bucket when compared to the gap between the 1942 Disney classic Bambi and its sequel Bambi II. A 10-year-old who saw the original would have been old enough to send their grandkids to get popcorn refills when the sequel hit theatres overseas (it went direct to DVD here) 64 years later.

And 30 years after Alfred Hitchcock made seagulls menacing in The Birds, a made-for-television movie called The Birds II: Land's End revisited the killer avian story. Tippi Hedren, star of the original, signed on and it was shot in the same house as the first film, but that's where the similarities between the two end.

The New York Times called the film "feeble," and Hedren said, "It's absolutely horrible; it embarrasses me horribly."

Also, 29 years and 343 days after 1968's The Odd Couple hit the big screen, writer Neil Simon and stars Jack Lemmon and Walter Matthau reunited for The Odd Couple II.

"We always had bad chemistry," says Oscar Madison (Matthau). "We mix like oil and frozen yogurt."

It marked the last starring roles for each of its leads and the final collaboration between Lemmon and Matthau after 10 movies together.

These days, Hollywood is obsessed with sequels and next year will be no different. Mad Max: Fury Road, starring Tom Hardy in the role that made Mel Gibson famous, returns 30 years after Mad Max Beyond Thunderdome. Jurassic World revisits Jurassic Park III, 13 years later.

But the biggest sequel news of the year — maybe of the decade — is the December 2015 release of Star Wars: The Force Awakens. In the official Star Wars chronology, the new film follows 1983's Return of the Jedi after a space of 32 years and 207 days.

Dumb and Dumber To

Directors. Bobby and Peter Farrelly

Stars. Jim Carrey, Jeff Daniels

In Dumb and Dumber To, Lloyd (Jim Carrey) and best friend Harry (Jeff Daniels) hit the road, this time in search of a daughter (Rachel Melvin) Harry didn't know he had. She's the "fruit of his loom" but could also be the kidney donor he needs to save his life. Two decades since the original, Harry and Lloyd haven't gotten any wiser but they haven't gotten much funnier, either. There are some astoundingly un-PC gags — and I mean "gags" literally — here, but none that reach the otherworldly vulgarity of the original's laxative overdose scene. Instead it's predictably silly, amiable stuff with wall-to-wall jokes and one-liners, some of which hit but most don't.

Bringing ‘were’-withal to Wolves. And howl!

Movies. Werewolf film director David Hayter on making the monsters that make the movie

scene@metronews.ca

A scene from David Hayters’s thriller Wolves. CONTRIBUTED

It’s taken filmmaker David Hayter seven long years to bring his werewolf thriller to the big screen, and in that time he’s learned one important lesson.

“Vampires have it easy. You just put some pale makeup on a good-looking actor and a cool pair of teeth and you got yourself a vampire,” laughed the 45-year-old writer-turned-director. “Werewolves are an entirely different thing. You can’t scrimp on the creature because that’s part of the joy of seeing a movie like this — seeing how the filmmakers execute the creature.”

In the case of his forthcoming feature Wolves, that meant forsaking the budget normally reserved for an A-list cast to pour those dollars into effects and monster design. For Hayter’s lupine lead characters, that meant no canine snouts (“they read like a big nose”) and a focus on realism.

“We all think werewolves are cool but in their execution, they can really go badly,” stated the dual Canadian-American citizen. “You have to determine what you think is subconsciously hilarious and take the edges off that.”

Hayter didn’t just want to explore the world of costume design. The screenwriter of such hits as Watchmen and X-Men aimed to spin a fresh angle on the werewolf mythology through a tale of a young violent teen who must come to terms with his wolfen bloodlines in a small town carrying dark secrets.

It may have been a challenge, but having studied under acclaimed X-Men director Bryan Singer several times, Hayter borrowed from the best.

“Pretty much everything I do in filmmaking I do with Bryan’s voice in my head screaming at me not to turn out crap,” said Hayter.

“Every element from creature design to screenplay execution to dealing with actors — all that stuff comes from what I learned from Bryan.”

The greatest and the most underrated

The Most Important Werewolf Film: American Werewolf in London

- “It’s such an incredible film, werewolf or no,” said Hayter of the 1981 John Landis hit. “Obviously the prosthetic effects in it weren’t only groundbreaking, but they continue to be incredible pieces of art today.”

The Most Underrated Werewolf Film: Ginger Snaps

- “I didn’t really understand the title and I just thought it sounded silly,” said Hayter of the 2000 Canadian horror classic. “It had a couple of sequels so I guess it got a good amount of attention, but it was really good.”

OUR TAKE ON THE WORLD OF CELEBRITIES

Taylor Swift ALL PHOTOS: GETTY IMAGES

Lorde is the bestie for her Swifty retort to Diplo gag

Oh, Diplo. You should have known not to go after Taylor Swift. When the DJ/producer started a Kickstarter campaign to Get Taylor Swift a Booty, Swift's BFF Lorde came to her rescue in full force. "Taylor Swift Still Needs Your Help," the campaign page reads. "Any true supporter of TSWIFT would definitely not pass up this opportunity to improve her posterior! THIS is not a joke!" (Obviously it's a joke.)

The fact that Diplo happens to be dating Swift enemy Katy Perry takes this from a prank to some song-writing-worthy drama. While Swift may not have fired back, that didn't stop Lorde, who tweeted at Diplo, "Should we do something about your tiny penis while we're at it?"

The Word

Achtung baby, there's U2 debris in those German trees

NED EHRBAR
Metro in Hollywood

Somewhere in a forest in Germany, a couple of suitcases from U2's private jet are just waiting for you to find them.

Bono and four friends were flying the band's Learjet 60 from Dublin to Berlin earlier this week when the rear door of the luggage compartment fell off and dropped 15,000 feet to the ground, along with two pieces of luggage.

While the pilots told investigators they felt a turbulence-like rumble, the crew and passengers didn't realize what had happened until they landed. "The aircraft and its rear door are painted black, so the search in the wooded area will be difficult," a spokesman for the German Federal Bureau of Aircraft Accident Investigation says.

All I'm saying is that somewhere in Germany, there's a hiker suddenly looking to shift 150 pairs of sunglasses on eBay.

Robin Wright

Robin Wright has Ben there, done that, breaks off engagement

There's been plenty of reporting about Sean Penn's love life since divorcing Robin Wright, from his brief fling with Scarlett Johansson to his ongoing relationship with Charlize Theron.

But what about Wright? What's she been up to? Well, maybe you shouldn't have asked. The House of Cards star has reportedly broken off her 10-month engagement to Ben Foster, according to Us Weekly.

"She got swept up in the engagement last Christmas, but then their schedules got crazy and she realized it wasn't the right decision," a source says.

But another source thinks it's all down to the age difference between the two. "The gap just ended up being too much," the second source insists. "Ben was kind of immature. She couldn't deal with him anymore." Ouch.

From Santa's sleigh. Playtime is getting a boost this Christmas

JEN TAPLIN
For Metro

There's not much parents wouldn't do to see little faces light up with delight and make Christmas magical.

If your kids are shorter than you, likely you'll be buying toys with a familiar faces on them, said Victoria Spada-Miele, with Toys "R" Us Canada.

"Infants, toddlers, preschoolers and young kids are really into the licensed products of the characters they love, interactive toys with lights, sounds and songs, as well as construction and building toys," she said.

Spada-Miele split this year's hottest toy trends into five categories. The first she called customized creations; these are toys like the Crayola Paint Maker and the Doh Vinci Style and Store Vanity. Everything in the pets-without-mess category are furry toys like Lulu My Cuddlin' Kitty, which kids can train. In the kid-powered category, parents will be looking for the LeapBand Activity Tracker or the Nerf Rebelle Heartbreaker and Crossbows.

On-screen favourites are toys that "bring the characters kids love to life and help kids role-play their favourite movies," Spada-Miele said.

The last category she calls toys to life, and these are toys that merge traditional with digital. Check out the Toy-Fi Teddy, which is Bluetooth enabled, or Tamagotchi Digital Pets.

Toy manufacturers have their own lists of what's hot this year.

Little Pnuts Founder, Melissa Bossola Beese, said kids are moving away from gender-specific toys.

"Children are beginning to look toward toys that engage through innovation. Marble runs, dominoes and building blocks are examples of toys that allow children to use their imagination to create just about anything," Bossola Beese said.

Toys that grow with kids are always a good choice for parents, Wiese said. An example is the Little Tikes Big Dog truck, which goes from a walker to ride-on with lights and sounds.

Mattel released its list of most popular toys this season, and for babies, the Fisher-Price Laugh and Learn Smart Stages Chair is at the top of the list. Barbie still reigns supreme. Mattel expects 2014 Holiday Barbie Doll to be a big hit for girls six and older.

6 ways to save for the holidays

It's the most spend-happy time of the year. Indeed, when it comes to the holiday season, budgets can easily and quickly get tossed out into the nearest snow bank. So how can we stay on track this year? We've collected some tips on how to save this Christmas.

Think outside the ... well, just outside Getting out and enjoying the outdoors over the holiday season can be friendlier to your wallet than catching the latest holiday movie. "Strap on a pair of skates and find an outdoor rink for a quick game of family shinny. If you live in a rural area or an urban environment with some green space, the cheap recreational possibilities are endless," says Kyle Prevost who co-authors the website YoungandThrifty.ca. "If the weather outside is frightful, introduce some young members of your family to a favourite board game that has been collecting dust for the last couple of years."

Get Googling ... and make the most of your online shopping. "If you hate trying to keep track of coupons, just Google 'promo code ____' before taking your online cart through the checkout and you can often save a huge amount off of the original price or at the very least snag free shipping," suggested Prevost. In addition, check other alternative retailers than the primary one you're shopping with for deals such as eBay, Kijiji and Craigslist.

Team up on gifts That way you could collectively spring for larger items that normally wouldn't fit in your budget. "This year, my spouse and I are teaming up with my parents to get my brother and his spouse camping Therm-a-rests," says Anne Keery, who runs the blog uniquegifter.com.

FIND A CAUSE CLOSE TO SOMEONE'S HEART

Soon — whether we're into it or not — we'll be in the thick of the holiday shopping frenzy. Throngs of shoppers will descend on malls, parking spots will be in short supply, and checkout lines will be the longest of the year. Not surprisingly, after a few hours in the stores, some of us will start resembling the walking dead. Then, there's the challenge of finding that perfect gift for that one person who has everything.

If you are looking for a great idea for relatives or friends who already own it all, consider a charitable gift or donation in his or her name. With so many choices out there, you're sure to find a cause that's close to someone's heart or a charitable organization that reflects the gift recipient's passion or values.

Research says people like to give and receive gifts that help those in need.

And the numbers prove it. According to a poll conducted by Ipsos Reid on behalf of World Vision, four in five Canadians prefer to give a gift that helps someone in need, and 63 per cent prefer to receive one.

The good news is that charitable gift giving in Canada has never been easier. Here are just a few sites worth visiting this holiday season.

World Vision Canada: Goats and chickens and pigs, oh my!

Through a World Vision charitable donation, you can help a child have a better future. For just about a dollar a day, you can help provide things like access to education, health care and clean, safe drinking water. Giving a meaningful gift from World Vision's unique gift catalogue is a wonderful way to get, and share, in the spirit of the season. What are the best-selling gifts? Two hens and a rooster ($50) and goats ($100) are always gifts that people love to give out, but group gifting of water wells and stocking medical clinics are gaining popularity as well. Find a wide range of meaningful, life-changing gifts for the holidays at worldvision.ca/gifts.

CanadaHelps.org: An online portal with thousands of choices

If you're not sure which charity would be most meaningful to your friend or family member, consider a gift card from CanadaHelps. An online portal to thousands of some 80,000 registered Canadian charities, CanadaHelps offers gift cards that let the recipient choose where to give. All you have to do is visit canadahelps.org/GiftCards, browse by charity or by category (eg., social services, environment, arts and culture, animals, international), pick an amount and provide details on where the card is going. Your gift recipient will receive an email notification, complete with instructions on how to spend it on a charity, and you'll receive a tax receipt for your donation.

ECO-FRIENDLY WRAPPING

If you are planning to do some gift wrapping this year, consider these eco-conscious suggestions:

- Fabric (try fabric remnants, scarves, and table napkins)
- Jars (save your spaghetti sauce and Mason jars)
- Reusable gift bags (use them over and over again)

Your gift can help give a blind person their vision

A Nepali couple came to a Seva Canada eye camp near the town of Arghakhanchi, Nepal in springtime last year. The husband, Ram Bahadur, was blind.

Many years ago, he had lost his left eye in an accident while breaking rocks to make concrete.

It became infected and, though he went to traditional healers, he did not seek help from eye specialists. He was too poor to travel the 2-3 days it would take to get to a hospital or to pay for the eye care.

Eventually the infection worsened and he lost the eye. Then a cataract in his right eye robbed him entirely of his vision.

CONTRIBUTED

His wife had cared for him faithfully ever since the accident, leading him by the hand, guiding him to his food, taking him to the washroom and looking after all of his needs. She brought him to the camp in the hope of restoring his sight. You could see in her face the heavy burden she carried.

Ram received cataract surgery. Afterward he was carried to his friend's home to spend the night, waiting and hoping for a new life.

The moment the eye patch was taken off he was able to see his wife's face. While his was a quiet happiness, she was clearly thrilled. Her ecstatic smile showed how relieved and happy she was that both of them had regained their independence and dignity. She told us that she was so pleased that she would not have to lead him everywhere including to the washroom.

When you give one person back their sight, you give at least two people back their lives. Most of the world's 39 million blind live in the developing world, and could have their sight restored if care was brought to them. ## Pappardelle with Braised Rabbit. This pasta dish is off the beaten culinary path in more ways than one

RICARDO COOKS
Chef Ricardo

If braising isn't in your cooking repertoire, it's time to add it — stat! This technique, which involves searing a piece of meat and letting it cook slowly in some stock and aromatics, delivers big flavour for a minimum amount of effort.

You will fall in love with this creamy pasta recipe. The rich sauce with braised rabbit is off the beaten path, since it doesn't include tomatoes.

Ragù

1. In a large saucepan or deep skillet over medium high heat, brown the rabbit in the butter. Season with salt and pepper. Set aside on a plate.

2. In the same saucepan, soften the carrots, onion and garlic. Sprinkle with the flour and cook while stirring for about 1 minute. Add the wine and bring to a boil, stirring constantly.

3. Add the broth, bay leaf and rabbit pieces. Bring to a boil, cover, and simmer over medium-low heat, for about 1 hour and 30 minutes. Remove the rabbit and bay leaf. Debone the meat and return it to the sauce. Adjust the seasoning.

Pasta

1. Meanwhile, in large pot of salted boiling water, cook the pasta al dente. Drain and oil lightly if they have to rest aside.

2. Add the pasta and herbs to the pan with the rabbit sauce. Stir to combine and warm through. Stir in the cheese and adjust the seasoning.

Ingredients

Ragù

- 1/4 cup (55 g) butter
- Salt and pepper
- 3 carrots, peeled and cut into 1/4-inch (1/2 cm) small cubes
- 1 onion, chopped
- 2 cloves garlic, chopped
- 1 tbsp unbleached all-purpose flour
- 1/2 cup (125 ml) white wine
- 4 cups (1 litre) chicken broth
- 1 bay leaf

Pasta
- 3/4 lb (340 g) pappardelle
- 2 tbsp chopped parsley
- 1 tsp chopped fresh rosemary
- 1 tsp chopped fresh thyme
- 1/2 cup (50 g) grated Parmigiano-Reggiano cheese

Liquid Assets

Wild pairing indeed

LIQUID ASSETS
Peter Rockwell

liquidassets@eastlink.ca

Growing up in Nova Scotia, I saw my fair share of rabbits in the wild, and sometimes even in my own backyard.

I was more into feeding them than eating them; though my grandfather was prone to springing one on me as an entrée during fishing trips we'd take together when I was a kid.

I've had rabbit since, but never featured on a bed of pappardelle à la Ricardo this week.

On its own, rabbit prefers a red. Its light, gamey flavour works well with wines made from Malbec, Shiraz and Pinot Noir.

In Ricardo's recipe the creamy sauce calls for a white liquid partner. A subtly oaked Chardonnay is a good choice, as is an Italian from Soave or a Pinot Grigio.

A white from France's Rhône region is an inspired alternative. M. Chapoutier's 2012 Belleruche Côtes-du-Rhône Blanc ($16.61 to $19.99) has a base of Grenache blanc that gives it bright aromatics and a full, round flavour that will appease both the protein and pasta dressing.

Comfort with a touch of fancy

Ingredients

- 6 veal cheeks (or 3 beef cheeks), trimmed of fat
- 2 tbsp (30 ml) olive oil
- 3 carrots, peeled and chopped
- 3 stalks celery, chopped
- 1 onion, chopped
- 2 garlic cloves, chopped
- 1 cup (250 ml) red wine
- 1 cup (250 ml) veal stock (or veal demi-glace or beef broth)
- 2 tbsp cocoa powder, sifted
- Salt and pepper

1. With the rack in the middle position, preheat the oven to 275 F (140 C).

2. In a Dutch oven over high heat, brown the meat in the oil. Season with salt and pepper. Transfer to a plate and set aside.

3. Soften vegetables in the remaining fat in the Dutch oven. Deglaze with the wine. Add the veal stock and the browned meat and bring to a boil. Cover, transfer to the oven and braise until meat is fork-tender, about 3-4 hours.

4. Remove the meat from the Dutch oven.

5. Whisk the cocoa powder into the sauce. Adjust the seasoning. Return the meat to the Dutch oven.

6. Serve with carrots and mashed potatoes. RICARDO

Elimimian earns West MOP honour

In a season when defence has been a predominant force in the Canadian Football League, it seems fitting that someone on that side of the ball is up for Most Outstanding Player.

B.C. Lions linebacker Solomon Elimimian was named the West Division's Most Outstanding Player on Thursday. He becomes the first defensive player in league history to take the honours, according to the club in a statement. Setting the new single-season league record for tackles, and doing it in relentless, bone-crushing style, was among his achievements this season.

He's up against Toronto's quarterback Ricky Ray, who was the East Division nominee, for the league MOP award.

Apart from individual accomplishments, Elimimian was the driving force with the mostly stingy Lions defence, which gave up the third fewest points in the league during the regular season.

After finishing the season with a 9-9 record, the Lions will cross over into the East Division playoff bracket. They're on the road to play the Montreal Alouettes in the East semi-final on Sunday.

"There is only one piece of hardware that I am truly interested in winning and that's the Grey Cup," said Elimimian, also named the West Division's Most Outstanding Defensive Player, in the statement.

The Lions and Alouettes split the season series, winning one game apiece.

Canucks in search of PP production

NHL. Vrbata has missed past two games due to injury, but is expected to return Friday

CAM TUCKER

There was a time when Radim Vrbata used to patrol the attacking zone, left just open enough to pounce on those deft Sedin passes.

"Early on ... teams didn't know. It seems like I'm alone there forever and nobody's going to cover me. It was a great feeling," Vrbata said with a laugh. "I was hoping it was going to be like that the whole season."

The results early on were as instant as they were spectacular for the Vancouver Canucks' power play, specifically its top unit, and at even strength, too.

One of the power play's designs includes Vrbata, a right shot, setting up on his off wing, while the Sedin twins, Daniel and Henrik, would weave their magic with the puck as the quarterbacks, moving it around with precision to open up a shot.

One objective was to find Vrbata with the backdoor play, setting him up for a quick one-time shot that would force the opposing goalie to slide across the crease. Voila — a scoring chance at the very least.

Vrbata, signed as an unrestricted free agent this summer, has scored twice this season on the power play, which enjoyed a renaissance in October, operating at 23.6 per cent in that month.

But since the start of November, the Canucks have scored just twice on their last 20 power-play opportunities, slipping to 16th in the league.

Vrbata, who has missed the last two games with an apparent leg injury, is expected to return to the lineup against his former team, now called the Arizona Coyotes, at Rogers Arena on Friday.

He admitted that opposing teams are adjusting to Vancouver's power play.

"They started to adjust so we have to create new ways to be successful on the power play," said Vrbata.

Head coach Willie Desjardins isn't about to panic just yet.

"I'll be more concerned when ... we're fresh and we're not executing as well. Then I think it's time we maybe took a look at a few things."

On the mend

Injury situation looks to be improving

Zack Kassian, who hasn't played since suffering an injury against Colorado on Nov. 4, took part in Thursday's practice, but skated as an extra defenceman.

Defenceman Kevin Bieksa was absent from practice.

"Just not feeling great today so we expect him to be around tomorrow," said head coach Willie Desjardins of Bieksa.

Derek Dorsett also returned to practice, on a line with Jannik Hansen and rookie Bo Horvat.

Defenceman Luca Sbisa and forward Tom Sestito were not at practice.

Dale Weiss had a penalty shot goal and an assist as the Montreal Canadiens downed the rival Boston Bruins 5-1 for their fourth straight win on Thursday night.

Max Pacioretty, with two, Lars Eller and Jiri Sekac also scored for Montreal (12-4-1), which saw Sergei Gonchar's debut after he was acquired Tuesday in a trade with Dallas.

Dougie Hamilton scored a power play goal for Boston (10-8-0), which lost badly for a second game in a row after a 6-1 pasting in Toronto on Wednesday night. The Bruins were playing a third game in four nights.

Niklas Svedberg got the start for Boston and faced 34 shots. Carey Price made 21 saves for Montreal.

The Bruins came out of the first period with a 1-0 lead on Hamilton's point shot from Patrice Bergeron's faceoff win only four seconds into a man advantage at 16:04.

Fatigue started to show in the second, however, as Boston took three straight penalties.

The first was a penalty shot at 2:31, as Dennis Seidenberg lost the puck and then tripped Weiss. The Canadiens fourth liner beat Svedberg between the pads. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Double honour for Kershaw

MLB. Dodgers lefty named NL MVP one day after winning Cy Young; Angels' Trout named top player in AL

Clayton Kershaw became the first pitcher to win the National League MVP award in nearly a half-century, coasting to an easy victory Thursday.

Mike Trout was a unanimous pick for the AL honour after finishing second the previous two years. The 23-year-old outfielder became the fifth-youngest MVP in major-league history and the youngest unanimous selection.

Kershaw, the Los Angeles Dodgers ace, breezed past Miami slugger Giancarlo Stanton and Pittsburgh outfielder Andrew McCutchen for the NL award.

Clayton Kershaw GETTY IMAGES

Bob Gibson in 1968 was the previous pitcher to be the NL MVP. Detroit pitcher Justin Verlander won the AL MVP in 2011.

"To have people think you mean that much to your team, it really is a huge honour," Kershaw said on the MLB Network telecast.

Impressive stats

In his third full season, Mike Trout hit .287 and set career highs in home runs (36) and RBIs (111). He led the major league in runs with 115 and extra-base hits with 84.

The 26-year-old lefty's numbers dominated hitters. Kershaw led the majors in wins and ERA while going 21-3 with a 1.77 ERA and throwing a no-hitter for the NL West champions.

Kershaw got 18 of 30 first-place votes and 355 points in balloting.

Meanwhile, Trout received all 30 first-place votes and 420 points. Detroit designated hitter Victor Martinez was second with 229 points and Cleveland outfielder Michael Brantley third with 185.

♈ Aries
March 21 - April 20
Don't let self-doubt creep into your mind. If a certain course of action was right before, it is still right. There is nothing wrong with what you are doing but your attitude could be better.

♉ Taurus

You need something to take your mind off your problems. Better still, you need to reorder your mind so you can see they are not really problems at all.

♊ Gemini
May 22 - June 21
Try not to exaggerate your troubles today, because with the Sun at odds with Jupiter, planet of expansion, things could easily get out of control.

♋ Cancer
June 22 - July 23
If you approach a work or relationship problem from a predictable angle then you will get a predictable answer. But if you creep up on it you may discover something you had not noticed before — that it's not really a problem at all.

♌ Leo
July 24 - Aug. 23
A financial matter must be left to run its course. You could've done more to influence the outcome but it's too late now.

♍ Virgo
Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
You may be able to see where loved ones are going wrong but unless they specifically ask for your assistance you are advised to keep your distance.

♎ Libra
Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
What you are given today may not be what you wanted but if you accept it in the right spirit it will lead to something better.

♏ Scorpio
Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
Every turn you take seems to lead further away from what you are aiming for. Could it be that your subconscious mind is trying to warn you that what you're aiming for isn't desirable?

♐ Sagittarius
Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
Something will challenge your established opinions today and you could even find yourself agreeing with ideas and theories you once dismissed.

♑ Capricorn
Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
You have a tendency to work harder than most people but with the Sun at odds with Jupiter today you could go too far and exhaust yourself.

♒ Aquarius
Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
You may be inclined to throw caution to the wind and take a gamble but the planets indicate it could go wrong. You don't have to take risks to get what you need — just stick to your present course.

♓ Pisces
Feb. 20 - March 20
If a friend proposes something out of the ordinary it might be wise to hold back from getting involved. This is one of those occasions when what seems like a great idea turns out not to be.
